7ICCH

Seventh International Congress on Construction History

His research gave rise to the structural plaster and he credited the mixing of constructive cultures from Muslim and Christian roots for the construction of vaulted structures. He researches on the construction of vaults, domes and stonework and masonry stairs of the Middle Ages and Modern Age; the exchanges of technical knowledge between stonecutters and masons of the Hispanic kingdoms and other Mediterranean and European cultures; and the causes that boost the acceptance and continuous adaptation of the medieval technique to new uses in the Modern Age (12th to 18th centuries). He has organized numerous congresses, seminars and courses on Construction History.
